

An Inukshuk is an Inuit monument made of unworked stones. In the Inuit language, Inukshuk means "in the likeness of a human". They are used by the Inuit for communication and survival and indicate that "someone was here" - an important message in the remote areas of the arctic region.