

Woodrow Wilson, President during World War I, was a successful scholar, teacher, university president and political leader before becoming President. When the war was over, President Wilson delivered to Congress his famous "Fourteen Points" as a guide toward peace and the establishment of the League of Nations.