

PRESIDENTIAL SEAL

The President of the United States is considered the most powerful elected official in the world. The President leads a democratic nation of great wealth and military strength. Presidents have often provided decisive leadership in times of crisis, and they have shaped many important events in history. The Presidential Seal is used primarily on official correspondence between the President and Congress, and a few other members of government. It is also on the presidential stationary and the lectern at all presidential news conferences.